

Sister ACT

The duo behind Kyle Michelle Weddings continues to make big day dreams come true amid the pandemic.

By Alexandra Leshner

Meghan Justice was knee-deep in the details of her 2011 nuptials when her sister, Kristin Phalines, had a revelation: If planning an event together was this much fun, why not do it all the time? They tested the waters by offering their services for free; happy clients spread the word, and in 2012, Kyle Michelle Weddings (kylemichelleweddings.com) was born.

Now they're one of the region's most in-demand planners, working with couples from Philly, New York and beyond to coordinate the perfect celebration. "We don't put limits on any of our couples or ever say no," says Justice. "We typically find ways to make even the most outrageous things work." Their can-do attitude toward planning has served them—and their clients—well throughout the pandemic, when guest list and venue restrictions left so many wedding plans up in the air. While most of their couples postponed, the Kyle Michelle team did orchestrate a handful of Plan B's and Plan C's for twosomes who were determined to tie the knot in 2020. "Every couple sees their day differently, and we want to make sure whatever plan they choose, it's the right one for them."